gave me birth, and more so am I, when I think of those heroes that shed their blood in defence of this blessed Republic, and helped to gain the Liberty which I now enjoy, and to shake off the tyranical government of Great Britain .-At the present time they are not behind hand in seeing their country righted in the war with Mexico. Their motto is: For Liberty we live, and for Liberty we will die. Should I then not dislike the foul assertion of the elitors of The Commercial in applying the word Dutchman as a slur upon the Nation, and that repeatedly? Yes I do, and always will. But a few more words and I have done with it .-The editors seem to have two points why Oh though, who couldst weep o'er the tomb of they think the Dutch ought not. But it seems to me as if they mean to say we are to be estimated by them. One is in making Toys and Gimeracks. I had the pleasure of being in | 30 a 33c. In looking over the assortment I found a large quantity of little boys, made out of wood, with red coats on. On enquiring what they meant, they told me they were little Englishmen, but I presume ever since Prince Gimeracks. Second, they are to be estimated by some importations of Dutchmen, Germans, and the like. No doubt this has been the case so now, but I think John Bull has been largely engaged in that same traffic himself, and more so than any other nation.
